

The 6th Annual Conference of Japan Academy of Public Health Nursing

Connecting the origins of public health nursing to the future
Sharing of new strengths of public health nurses who work together with local residents to eliminate health disparities

The 6th Annual Conference of the Japan Academy of Public Health Nursing will be held in Osaka, the birthplace of modern public health nursing activities.

Public health nursing activities are required to both expand in response to the health challenges of the times and properly convey the origins of community-based activities, even once the times have changed. At this annual conference, we hope to strengthen strategies for addressing the health disparities and various health conditions of people that are based on the origins of public health activities and connect these origins to the future, by visiting regions where people live, listening to people's concerns, and sharing the strengths of public health nurses who work together with local residents and related professionals. We expect this conference to be a forum to further expand the various activities that protect health and that are concerned with all stages of people's lives.
